

Correlogram shows that Internet coverage has high correlation with happiness. Interestingly, Corruption, corruption index from UNICEF, and Trust, corruption index from World Happiness Report, are not highly correlated. Generosity turns out to be least correlated with all other variables. Naively, people from richer country where family ties are strong tend to be more generous. But this is not what we see in the graph. These observations cast doubts about the validity of the happiness score decomposition.

